MARINE ACTIVITY HUNS IN QUANTICO

Quantico is a beehive of industry. In that Virginia sector Uncle Sam's marines are given final, intensive day and night training, until they rank among the world's most efficient fighters. And they work.

The marine begins his day at 4:30 a. m. and keeps everlastingly at it until 4:30 in the afternoon—drilling, digging trenches, marching over the hills with heavy artillery, hauling light guns, learning to use the bayonet, shooting on the range, and using gas masks in gas houses. From 4:30 a. m. to 4:30 p. m. is his "ordinary" day, but such days are few and far between at Quantico now. There is a sniping range—a three-square mile area cut up by a trench system, duplicating sector No. 3 (Vimy ridge), in the Lens district in France. Every night there are two or three hundred snipers out on this area for hours at a time. The men who handle the heavy artillery, the machine guns, and the anti-air craft guns, too, a great deal of their work at night, besides "eating up" the ordinary day work prescribed for the marines.

There are no slackers at Quantico; everywhere work is being done. One hears the "thrust! long point! short point! in, out!" of the men wielding bayonets, the roar of the big guns among the hills, the bark of the rifles and machine guns out on the range; one sees men swinging pickaxes in the trenches, police squads keeping Quantico one of the cleanest camps in the world; miners and sappers building job cabins; road builders at work.

When a half-mile cinder road was needed to connect two important points within the post, fifty road experts were given six trucks and a detachment of the 1st Marine Division to establish a record. They did. The road—eighteen inches of cinder and eighteen feet wide—was in use two days after the work was started.

Quantico is built on a bluff, fifty feet high, overlooking the Potomac, and at one time there was danger of the ground giving way and part of the camp sliding into the river. There are experienced engineers at Quantico, and many willing workers. Great trees were cut, brought down to the water's edge, and one of the greatest riveting jobs ever attempted was begun. The engineers and their helpers built a firm foundation, and foot by foot, on a hundred-yard front, the structure began to mount upward, saving Quantico from becoming a "floating city."

After the three or four months of labor the marines go through at Quantico, the work of looking the Huns should be a real rest in comparison.

Work was begun on the barracks at Quantico in June, 1917. Instructors are fresh from the western, Italian, and Serbian fronts, drilling the marines continuously in trench warfare.

BRITISH COMMEND AMERICAN FLYERS

Twenty-nine American flyers are mentioned with credit for their exploits on the Western front in the British Royal Air Force reports, which were received here today.

These American officers, who went over early in the war, when there were no flying schools in this country, and were taught abroad, have brought down fifty enemy airplanes and seven balloons from July 1 to August 25.

The War Department announcement referring to the fact that many flyers were taught abroad says:

"The acceleration in speed and the enlargement in numbers of the American aerial program, made possible by this wholehearted co-operation by the allies, is a matter of grateful acknowledgment at this time."

The instances of extraordinary merit in action are these:
Lieutenants M. L. Campbell, L. A. Hamilton, E. G. Landis, J. A. Keating, Simpson.

General Pershing's earlier reports show that the British "distinguished flying cross" has been awarded to the following officers of the American air service: First Lieut. George A. Vaughan, Jr.; First Lieut. Thomas J. Herbert, First Lieut. Morton L. Campbell, and First Lieut. Lloyd A. Hamilton.

Or those mentioned in the British reports, Lieuts. G. Reed Landis, James Alfred Keating, and Howard Clayton Knotts are from Lillinois, the two first mentioned from Chicago, and the last from Carlinville.

PRINTERS GET RAISE

A decision granting an increase in wages to the printers of Chicago was announced yesterday by the War Labor Board.

The wages of the workers are increased from $21 a week to $24.50 a week, retroactive to July 12, 1918. The rates are to remain in effect for the period one year unless conditions justify the board in making a re-adjustment. Night workers shall work forty-eight hours a week. The board will assign an examiner to supervise carrying out of the award.
